Scene on the "Ajax." Mark Twain. io a letter to the Virginia GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES! City Enterprise, describes some of the incidents of the recent pleasure trip of the steamer "Ajax" to the Sandwich Islands. The following is excruciatingly laughable:

Lewis Leland, proprietor of the Occiden tal Hotel, was a passenger. There were some savage grizzly bears chained in cages on deck. One night in the midst of a burriane, which was accommanied by rain and thusder and lightning. Mr. Leland came up en his way to bed. Just as he stepped into the pitchy darkness of the deck, and recled to the still more pitchy motion of the vessel. the Captain sang out hearsely through his apeaking-trumpet, "Bear a hand alt, there!" The words were sadly marred and jumbled by the roaring wind. Mr. Leland thought the Captain said. "The hears are after you, there!" and he "let go all holts" and went down into his boots. He murmured, 'I knew how it was going to be-I just knew it from the start-I said all along that those bears would get loose some time, and now tain!—Captain!—can't hear me—storm roars so. Oh, God. what a fate! I have avoided wild beasts all my life, and now to be eaten by a grizzly hear in the middle of the eccan, a thousand miles from land!
Captain! Captain! Oh, Captain!—bless my soul, there's one of them!—I've got to cut and run!" And he del cut and run. and smashed through the door of the first state room he came to. A gentleman and his wife were in it. The gentleman exclaimed, "Who's that?" The refugee gasped out, "Oh, great Scotland, those bears are loose, and just raising merry hell all over the ship!" and then sank down exhaust-The gentleman sprang out of bed and locked the door, and prepared for a singe. After a while, no assault being made, a reconnoissance was made from the window. and a vivid flash of lightning revealed a clear deck. Mr. Leland then made a dart for his own state room, gained it, locked himself in, and felt that his body's salvavation was accomplished, and by little less than a miracle. Now I have told this story as I heard it from a passenger, who said he would vouch for every part of it except the language, which is stronger than Mr. Laland ever indulged in. The next day the subject of this memoir, though still very feeble and nervous, had the hardihood to make up a joke on his adventure. He said that when he found himself in so tight a place (as he thought) he didn't bear it with much fortitude, and when he found himself get up again for nine days. This unques-tionably bad joke cast a gloom over the whole ship's company, and no effort was sufficient to restore their wonted cheerful-ness until the vessel reached her port, and other scenes crased it from their memories.
